During Thursday's proceedings at the ECCC, defense attorney Francois Roux once again raised the issue of projecting proper names for audience members to see. I've raised this issue before and still think it would be incredibly beneficial for comprehension of the proceedings.

Since many names referred to in session are Khmer, they can be very difficult for non-Khmer speakers to understand. I would assume the same is true for English and French names.

Judges instructed the tribunal's IT staff to begin looking into the issue this week. I hope they do and it is resolved quickly.
