

High-tech court

Written by
Monday, 22 February 2010 09:10

A very exciting development for those of us trying to keep up with ECCC developments from abroad: the tribunal has launched a “virtual court.”

"The Virtual Tribunal will be a groundbreaking way for the [tribunal] to digitally make available to the public all trial related materials such as decisions, filings, trial transcripts and video of the court proceedings," according to Voice of America .

U.S. universities partnering with the effort include Stanford and the University of California, Berkeley.

A reader also recently alerted me to another excellent online resource for those interested in Southeast Asian history and politics. Michael Wolf, a Masters student at Texas Tech University, introduced me to the Vietnam Virtual Archive . Through the archive, he was able to find a copy of a Khmer Rouge document called the "Black Paper," which I was unable to locate after it was referenced during proceedings in May

.